ABOUT THIS WEBINAR

Leadership-Mindset: Team Decision-Making When Time is Scarce

This Webinar is all about how to discover that you're on the wrong path: FAST! We combine lessons from the U.S. Department of Defense, Big Tech, Van Halen, and High-Stakes Poker!

Learn how to use "Red-Teaming" techniques to foster healthy disagreement in your teams, without creating disarray and without wasting time.

This is not about criticizing one's leaders, which is often a career-limiting move. Instead, it is about how you—once you are the leader—can create an atmosphere where people below you are more comfortable to speak up before bad ideas gain traction.

This is a “fail fast” method that allows you to lead inclusively while holding more decisive meetings.

Learning Outcomes

- Explore the behavioral-economic theory behind making better decisions through red-teaming.
- Examine practical leadership tips on how to apply red-teaming.
- Support healthy disagreement in your teams without wasting time and without lacking confidence.

ABOUT DR. DAYLIAN CAIN

Daylian M. Cain, Ph.D., is an award-winning Yale faculty member who studies why smart people do dumb things. He is a Senior Lecturer of Negotiations, Leadership, & Ethics at the Yale School of Management. Hailing from Nova Scotia, Canada, Cain has a Ph.D. in Management from Carnegie Mellon. Prior to joining Yale, Cain was the Russell Sage Fellow of Behavioral Economics at Harvard University.

Cain is often one of the highest-rated professors in Yale's executive education. For multiple years, he had the highest yearly-average rating and lowest variance in ratings. Cain is lead faculty on a new sales and leadership training program for Volvo America, lead instructor for the "Yale Negotiation Strategies" online program, and co-instructs Yale's "Leading Effective Decision-Making" program, which earned the highest-ever rating of an inaugural program on Yale's platform.

Fun Fact: Dr. Cain has appeared as a special guest on National Geographic's TV show Brain Games (Season 2, "You Decide").
